Morrison believes that the best investments serve an enduring societal need – We seek to identify the major global themes that will shape economies, industries and societies over multiple decades. By understanding how these themes will impact infrastructure subsectors, we can adopt a proactive origination approach that generates more attractive, less competed investment opportunities.

Morrison focuses on tomorrow's infrastructure environment – Morrison is a long-term thematic investor. By securing unique insights about the market through our extensive experience, we aim to identify investment opportunities that will benefit from long-term trends linked to the evolving needs of society and economies. Our sector insights and targeted origination approach mean we are perpetually creating the next vintage of market-leading businesses in the most attractive subsectors.

Morrison is committed to building and retaining deep in-house sector expertise and operational capability – As infrastructure specialists, we believe this depth is important to recognizing and managing changes in industry dynamics and asset-level complexities, which are increasingly prominent features within infrastructure markets and investments. Our operating expertise, networks and reputation provide us with a privileged position as a partner of choice.

As the world changes, so does our portfolio – Today, demand for infrastructure is rising in many developed economies, fueled by long periods of public under-investment, energy security and the energy transition, technological adoption, the demand for greater domestic infrastructure security in the face of heightened global security and supply risks, and the need to meet population growth and demographic changes.
